

SIGNS

of a Child's Vision Problem

1

Blinking and/or rubbing eyes often

Headaches, nausea, dizziness

Eyes that itch or burn

Unusually short attention span

Avoidance of tasks with small objects

Discoloration

Turning or tilting head to use only one eye

Covering one eye

Eyes that cross, turn in or out,
move independently

Holding toys close to eyes

Bumping into things, tripping

Squinting, frowning

Redness, soreness

When there is a vision problem, your child may not know something is wrong and, therefore, may not alert you. You can make a difference by getting help from CNIB and learning how to adapt the child's environment.

Lighting: Is it bright enough? Is it too bright? Is it in the right place?

Contrast: Are there strong contrasts to help children see the things that are important?

Location: Are things that children need to see placed within their field of vision?

Size: Is print large enough? Is print clear? Are toy and game pieces big enough?

Organization: Are things well organized so they can be located with ease? Have cluttering elements been eliminated?

Colour: Are colours clear and bright on things you want noticed?

Glare: Do surfaces cut down glare so reflected light does not interfere with vision? Have distracting light sources been reduced by adjustable blinds, shades, carpeting, etc.?

Time and Planning: Is enough time given to look at things? Can children anticipate what is going to happen and be prepared to observe? Have verbal cues been offered when appropriate?
